Q.1 To what extent, if at all, do you think each of these groups should be responsible for the general wellbeing (i.e. happiness) of children? By this we mean responsibility for all children generally, not just seeking out those who are specifically vulnerable to abuse. Please indicate your view on a scale from 1 to 10, where 1=should not be responsible at all, through to 10=should be very responsible.

Q.1 To what extent, if at all, do you think each of these groups should be responsible for the general wellbeing (i.e. happiness) of children? By this we mean responsibility for all children generally, not just seeking out those who are specifically vulnerable to abuse. Please indicate your view on a scale from 1 to 10, where 1=should not be responsible at all, through to 10=should be very responsible.

	The Government seems to want to interfere too much in family life these days	The Government's child protection resources should be focused on identifying and helping those most at risk, rather than monitoring every child	I am concerned that social services sometimes are too quick to take action against parents who have done nothing wrong	The Government does a good job of balancing the need to protect children at risk while not penalising ordinary parents	I know other parents who are reluctant to take their children to A&E or the GP because of concerns it might trigger an unwarranted investigation by child protection staff

Q.4 The Scottish Government is introducing the 'Named Person Scheme', where every child will be assigned a health visitor or teacher tasked with monitoring that child's 'wellbeing'. The external Named Person is expected to look at various aspects of family life, including whether parents argue, whether the child misses GP or dental appointments, whether they enjoy spending time with their parents and whether the child is consulted before major family decisions are made. The Scottish Government claims that the scheme will 'work with children, young people and their families to get the help they need, when they need it'. However, opponents of the scheme, including the Scottish Parent Teacher Council, argue that the Named Person represents an unwelcome intrusion which effectively turns the State into a co-parent. Some believe that aspects of the Scottish scheme may eventually be rolled out across the whole of the UK. Taking the information that you have read on the previous screen into account, do you agree or disagree with each of the following statements about the 'Named Person Scheme'?

Summary Table

Base: All respondents/respondents who are parents

	Statements
	It is right for every child to be assigned a Named Person to monitor their wellbeing, whether their parent(s) wants one or not	It should be up to parents to ask for help from the Government when they need it	It is reasonable for a Named Person to ask children questions about their family life, even if there is no sign that anything is wrong	Assigning a Named Person to every child, whether vulnerable or not, is an unacceptable intrusion into family life	The Government's role should be to guarantee that every child has what they need to live a good life	It is primarily the job of parents, not the Government, to bring up their children in the way they think best	I would trust a Named Person to always act in the best interests of a child, even where this conflicted with parents' wishes	I would be concerned that if I had a Named Person assigned to a child of mine, we could disagree about what is in the child's best interests

Q.4 The Scottish Government is introducing the 'Named Person Scheme', where every child will be assigned a health visitor or teacher tasked with monitoring that child's 'wellbeing'. The external Named Person is expected to look at various aspects of family life, including whether parents argue, whether the child misses GP or dental appointments, whether they enjoy spending time with their parents and whether the child is consulted before major family decisions are made. The Scottish Government claims that the scheme will 'work with children, young people and their families to get the help they need, when they need it'. However, opponents of the scheme, including the Scottish Parent Teacher Council, argue that the Named Person represents an unwelcome intrusion which effectively turns the State into a co-parent. Some believe that aspects of the Scottish scheme may eventually be rolled out across the whole of the UK. Taking the information that you have read on the previous screen into account, do you agree or disagree with each of the following statements about the 'Named Person Scheme'?
